My Experience with estate agents and Hadleigh

In trying to sell my NW3 home, I approached the usual local estate agents and experienced several different experiences, which ranged from pleasantly pro active to not being focused. One, the largest agents known for selling luxury properties and local to my address, was incompetent.

And then there was Hadleigh.

Hadleigh, of all of the NW3 agents, is the smallest. The other agents have several branches or more. Hadleigh, has one office comprising of a team of agents who work well together.

Hadleigh successfully found a buyer and sold my home.

The selling process became complicated, for various reasons. Hadleigh's Michael Vaidya, showed incredible patience towards the buyers and me.

Michael always quickly responded to phone calls, emails and was always ready to have a positive, calm and wise view in solving any issue which to me appeared to be a problem. He kept both parties fully informed while helping to move the process forward and to a good conclusion. Michael Vaidya is remarkable.

However big estate agents are, there is a lot in favour of a boutique agency, highly established, knowing its area and the market of that area and having such wise agents such as Michael to advise and steer the process of buying and selling homes. The agency works well, because Hadleigh's works as a solid unit conducted brilliantly by Nick Collins.

My experience has been beyond excellent....go to Hadleigh, I say
